Transport fuels August increase in Dubai inflation

17 September 2026

- Higher petrol prices and elevated airfares drove an increase in Dubai's headline inflation to 5.5% in August.
- We have raised our year-end inflation forecast to 5.6%, reflecting the persistence of high oil prices.
- Gains in housing costs are the largest contributor to the headline inflation rate, although price increases in this category have slowed relative to the start of the year.

Higher transport costs drove an acceleration in Dubai inflation in August, reflecting the unevenness of the disinflation path. We expect headline price growth to remain elevated through this year before easing in 2027.

Consumer prices rose 5.5% year on year last month, from 5.3% in July, and 0.3% on the month, up from 0.1% in July.

We have revised our year-end forecast for inflation to 5.6%, reflecting a longer period of elevated oil prices than we had previously expected. Volatile global energy markets present risks to both sides of the forecast.

Petrol remains the main swing factor in Dubai's CPI basket. The 31.3% annual increase in fuels and lubricants prices recorded in August is consistent with the 33.8% rise in the cost of a litre of Super 98. Passenger air-transport costs rose 23.2% year on year despite falling 9.8% on the month.

These were the two fastest annual gains in the basket and pushed transport inflation to 12.7%, from 11.9% in July, contributing 1.5 percentage points to the headline rate.

Transport costs are likely to add more pressure in September. Super 98 currently costs 40.7% more than a year ago, and we expect this increase to lead to another rise in headline inflation this month.

Housing and utilities remained the largest underlying contributor to the headline inflation rate, adding 2.5 percentage points. Prices in this category rose 0.2% on the month, while annual gains slowed to 6.7%, from 7.0%. This marks a moderation from the 7.4% recorded at the start of the year, but the category's large weight means it continues to account for much of headline price growth. Officials again cited higher residential rents across much of the emirate.

Food-price pressures softened in August. Prices fell 0.5% on the month, slowing annual food inflation to 7.4%, from 7.8% in July. This may reflect businesses adapting to supply-chain disruptions caused by the regional conflict.

Restaurant and hotel costs suggest firms have more pricing power than in the early months of the conflict. Annual inflation in the category rose to 5.0%, from 4.5% in July, helped by an 8.0% monthly increase in accommodation-services prices.

Only six of the 13 CPI categories recorded faster annual price growth than in July. Sticky rents, elevated food prices and volatile transport costs will prevent a rapid slowdown in price pressures, but inflation appears close to its peak.
